Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from On the Coasts of Cathay and Cipango Forty Years Ago: A Record of Surveying Service in the China Yellow and Japan Seas and on the Seaboard of Korea and Manchuria In the year 1855, a portion of the British Fleet, then in Chinese waters, which was detached for the purpose of capturing the Russian Squadron known to be in the Gulf of Tartary, and traced to an anchorage at the head of it, Castries bay, had been practically played the fool with owing to hydrographical ignorance alluded to in the above quotation; for, while the English Commodore supposed he had entrapped the Russians in that bay, from which he concluded they had no escape, save by attacking him in their passage to the southward to reach the Sea of Okhotsk by way of La Perouse Strait, - the Russians had quietly retired through the straits separating the Island of Saghalin from the main, where the imagination of geographers had placed an isthmus, and so had escaped to the shelter of their fortifications in the Amur River. The navigability of this channel was unknown to any one save the Russians, who had had possession of this knowledge since 1849, from the discoveries that year, of their naval captain, Nevelskoy. This ignorance, geographical and hydrographical, of England, at home, screened the commodore for his failure on the coast of Tartary, though naval men on the China station were by no means complimentary in speaking of him; fogs, physical and mental, had, no doubt, played their part in the resulting indecision.
